

A GREAT FIRST YEAR

■ School of Bodywork in Exeter which helps those looking for a career change re-train as massage therapists is celebrating a successful first year.

All of last year's students gained either a distinction or credit in their diploma exams, scoring between 75 and 98 per cent.

Emma Gilmore from School of Bodywork said: "We put our success down to our friendly yet professional approach. Small class sizes ensure individual attention.

One-to-one support and mentoring from enrolment to qualification delivers top results.

"We aim to equip our students with the clinical knowledge and the hands-on skills necessary to set up their own successful practice with confidence. And we aim to make learning fun, using a multi-sensory teaching approach. We embrace all prior experience, or lack of it."

Student Alice Pollak from Totnes said: "The course is in-depth and informative in its academic content, supportive and encouraging in its approach to the profession we're training to enter, and ever challenging and rewarding on a personal level. There's a lot to learn in a year, and this is definitely only the beginning, but it feels like a strong framework upon which I shall build in the future."
