

A day for budding bodyworkers

SPEAK to any complementary health practitioner and they'll tell you therapy training is just the beginning of the journey and support is required to turn that qualification into a successful, ongoing business.

If you think massage and bodywork could be the career for you, don't miss the School of Bodywork's open day at Exeter Natural Health Centre (in between Queen St and Gandy St), on Saturday, June 16.

The day is an opportunity to visit the centre, meet the tutors and see them in action giving demonstrations of a variety of massage and bodywork techniques.

The School of Bodywork's Emma Gilmore said: "It's a great opportunity for past, present and future students to chat with tutors, re-cap, catch up, network and gain valuable CPD points by attending.

"There will also be reductions on course fees, free taster sessions and equipment for sale on the day."

And for any practitioners looking to boost their client base, Therapists Marketing Solutions will be on hand to run a workshop called Building your Practice, Maximising Impact, 1-4pm.

The open day is free, the afternoon workshop costs £40 and places must be booked.
